

Make us your start page

Washington, DC
71° Partly Cloudy
Personalize

Search The

D.C.'s Southwest waterfront reinvents itself again

D.C.'s Southwest waterfront has been reinventing itself for decades. In the 1950s, city planners evicted nearly all its residents and leveled most buildings. Now it's being reinvented again.

Co-workers Cliff Ho, Josh Christian, and Kyle Sproul, Kyle Chavez and Julius Yellow eat at the Maine Avenue Fish Market waterfront. The men, employees of S Albuquerque, were in town for a conference. Amanda Voisard / THE WASHINGTON POST

Related Content

Article: Trying to get revitalized Southwest waterfront

10/10

Share

Thumbs

Autoplay

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Recommend

0

Share

Comments are closed.

About Discussions, Badges

Discussion Policy

Top Comments (0) All Comments (0)

Newest first Oldest first Most Recommended first

Empty comment input field

No Top Comments are available at the moment. View all Comments.

Comments our editors find particularly useful or relevant are displayed in Top Comments, as are comments by users with these badges: Washingtologist. Replies to those posts appear here, as well as posts by staff writers.

Ways you can get us

- Mobile
- Newsletter & alerts
- Post Store
- Photo Store
- Washington Post Live

- Apps
- RSS
- Facebook
- Twitter

The Washington Post

- About Us
- Work for us
- Community Relations
- PostPoints
- Corrections/Suggestions
- Archive
- Contact the Ombudsman
- Report a problem

Web site

- Make us your homepage
- Newspaper
- Subscribe
- Home delivery service
- e-Replica
- Reprints

Advertise

- In the ne
- On the w
- Mobile
- Events
- The Wash
- Post Cor

Partners